ILLINOIS' REPUBLICAN SENATOR ANNOUNCES SUPPORT FOR SAME-SEX MARRIAGE

BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE FILE

Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON Sen. Mark Kirk on Tuesday announced that he supports gay marriage, joining a growing list of U.S. senators who offer such support.

In a statement, he wrote: "When I climbed the Capitol steps in January, I promised myself that I would return to the Senate with an open mind and greater respect for others.

"Same-sex couples should have the right to civil marriage. Our time on this earth is limited, I know that better than most. Life comes down to who you love and who loves you back—government has no place in the middle."

Kirk, a Republican from Highland Park, on Jan. 3 climbed the steps of the Capitol to return to the Senate almost a year after a major stroke and lengthy period of rehabilitation. He was elected in 2010 to the Senate after nearly 10 years in the House.

Kirk's decision brings to 50 the number of U.S. senators who support gay marriage, including 46 Democrats, two independents and two Republicans, according to Charlie Joughin, spokesman for the Human Rights Campaign, a civil rights group that advocates for lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people.

Sen. Rob Portman, R-Ohio, is the only other Republican senator to support gay marriage.

Illinois' other senator, Democrat Dick Durbin, also is a supporter of gay marriage, telling National Public Radio recently that the issue was the "civil rights question of our time." Durbin said that friends he'd become close to over the years now were in committed relationships and called them "good people, some raising children."

A group called Freedom to Marry, which supports gay marriage, issued a statement Tuesday from its founder and president, Evan Wolfson, praising Kirk's announcement.

"With Sen. Kirk's support, the U.S. Senate is now ready to move to the right side of history in support of same-sex couples' freedom to marry," Wolfson wrote.

"Senator Kirk's heartfelt words about values of treating others as we'd all want to be treated in our precious time on this planet powerfully make the case for the freedom to marry—and the need for decision-makers to end marriage discrimination in the United States."

THE KIRK FILES

What is Kirk's record on gay marriage?

- » During his 2010 Senate race, he supported civil unions, opposed gay marriage and endorsed the federal Defense of Marriage Act, which defines marriage as between a man and a woman.
- » While in the House, Kirk voted against the repeal of "Don't Ask, Don't Tell," which had banned gays and lesbians from serving openly in the military.
- » He reversed his position after he was elected to the Senate in November 2010, becoming one of eight GOP lawmakers to vote in favor of repealing the ban.
- » He later turned down a White House invitation to attend a ceremony during which President Obama signed the historic repeal into law. TRIBUNE

When gore is real, we just can't look

No matter who wins this year's NCAA men's basketball tournament, the victory will be a footnote to the spectacular, gut-wrenching injury Louisville's Kevin Ware incurred in the first half of the Cardinals' Elite Eight game against Duke.

I feel extremely guilty because my friends and I happened to be driving back from a wedding on Sunday that took us up I-65 from Louisville to Indianapolis, and the flood of Cards fans clogging the road added a solid two hours to the drive. Extremely hung over and crabby, we all wished for Louisville's demise, but then God went and got psychopathic about it.

We meant, "Have them lose the basketball game to Duke," bro. Not "rip a guy's bone out of his leg on national television," you sick, bored weirdo.

After reviewing the available material on YouTube, I agree we need to rewrite the list of weirdest sports stories of the year. Dennis Rodman and Manti Te'o—improbably—just got demoted. Yet I also couldn't help but reflect that we members of rich countries who get to skip the overseas military adventures have a strange relationship to violence.

We gobble it up when it's fake. The Kevin Ware injury was just a day at the office for Jack Bauer. If that's all the murderer-of-the-week on your basic "CSI" or "Criminal Minds" did to his victim, ratings would fall through the floor. We'll yawn if Joffrey isn't cutting some guy's tongue out by Episode 2 of the new season of "Game of Thrones."

Yet CBS caught hell for showing the replay. Rick Pitino compared it to losing his brother-in-law on 9/11. This is not to say that CBS should have replayed it in slow-motion HD like some standard controversial out-of-bounds call. The injury reaches down to a deep part of our brain that says something like, "Oooooh, riiiiight, the universe is chaos and the human body frail and impermanent, and eventually we all will be shattered bones and then dust. Gotcha. Keep forgetting that when 'Criminal Minds' is on."

In large swaths of the world, violence is not the exception but the rule. Yet we in this democratic society frequently cast our ballots for agents who don't just spur violence but promise it in their campaign speeches. There's no video of those kids of Sandy Hook on the news. On the 10th anniversary of the Iraq war, there's no segment that shows what white phosphorus does to human flesh. There's no coverage of what a drone strike looks like from the ground. But we support wars, the unchecked distribution of firearms, the prison-industrial complex and myriad other forms of institutional violence, and then we see this comparatively innocuous freak accident and just blanch.

Which is not to say that Kevin Ware deserves anything less than our full and robust empathy. I mean, damn: My pulse did a Patrick Carney drum solo when I watched that video. As a show of support, I'll be voicing my opinion to God that Louisville deserves to go on and win the tournament. We'll just hope that He doesn't take that to mean, "Give everyone at Wichita State the bubonic plague."

PAY-TO-PLAY SITES HELPING SOME STUDENTS MAKE ENDS MEET

CNN

Serena Cervantes has been struggling to earn her bachelor's degree for seven years.

With tuition for two courses at her California university demanding $2,300, it's not the workload that has her putting off the final class she needs to graduate in May.

Money is tight.

The 25-year-old has worked as a maid and retail clerk to make ends meet, but she says that dating the men she encounters on sugardaddie.com has proved to be a more lucrative endeavor.

"I've had a hard time finding jobs and keeping jobs," she said. "I thought this would be a good way for me to have a relationship with someone and also make it, as these sites all say, mutually beneficial."

Cervantes is just one of many students who've sought out sugar daddies online in a time of need. Dating site seekingarrangement.com, which connects wealthy men with women looking for financial support, reports that female college students made up 44 percent of the site's total users in 2012. With tuition on the rise, that number could continue to climb.

While some may compare the practice to prostitution or question the morality of trading money and gifts for affection, the people who use these sites contend that they're merely a conduit for both parties getting what they want.

What's the draw?

Men who engage in such relationships, many of whom are older and married, enjoy taking care of young women and assuming a mentor role in their lives, said Steven Pasternack, who launched sugardaddie.com in 2002.

"You have some guys who like to spoil and pamper their women by taking them out to nice dinners, buying them gifts. Some maybe help with the utility bills or take them on trips," Pasternack said. "And there are other guys that will have an ongoing relationship in which they'll say, 'OK, I'll give you an allowance and you can put this toward whatever your needs are.' "

The average monthly "allowance" sugar daddies on the site said they shell out is $3,000, according to seekingarrangement.com.

> "I've had a hard time finding jobs and keeping jobs. I thought this would be a good way for me to have a relationship with someone and also make it, as these sites all say, mutually beneficial."
> —Serena Cervantes

So what do these "sugar daddies" get in return for all their generosity? Surprisingly, sex isn't a given. It's obviously on the table, Cervantes says, but there are other motivations.

"Some of them just wanted to go out to eat," she said. "Some of them just wanted someone to talk to. Some of them just said outright, 'Can we [have sex] for this amount of money?' And I've said no."

But she admits that sex ups the ante—if a sugar baby consents to an intimate relationship, she's likely to get more gifts out of her benefactor. »

CHICAGO CONNECTION
The sugar dating phenomenon popped up in Chicago news recently when arrangementfinders.com twice had its billboards removed after neighbors complained about its tagline, "Because the best job is a b_w job." The signs featuring porn star Bree Olson were removed from locations downtown and in Avondale last month.

"If you look at the language of various state statutes, the terms of many of the relationships fall under the definition of prostitution," said New Jersey attorney Alex Miller, who has studied "sugar dating." Authorities shy away from prosecuting sugar websites and their users because the relationships can mirror a typical romance, Miller said. Plus, users are savvy enough not to broadcast online whether they're trading sex for cash.

Sex isn't the only motivator for sugar daddies, according to Brandon Wade, the founder and CEO of seekingarrangement.com. Some also want to help a struggling women.

Wade, 42, (who met his 27-year-old wife on the site) said most of the men on the site begin communication with potential sugar babies by asking them why they're looking for a sugar daddy.

He's found that women who say they need money to pay for school get asked out more often than those who admit they want cash for other things, for instance.

While most of the sugar daddies Cervantes has met through the website prefer to arrange a per-date per diem, one married man wrote her a check for $1,600 to go toward her tuition and rent after their monthlong courtship.

She said she prefers dating married men because they tend to be more paternal and offer a steadier source of income than single men.

SUGAR MAMA DATING
"Are you a young male in your twenties? Do you like older women?" These are the questions posed on the splash page of sugarmamadating.com. The site says it pairs wealthy women with younger men who want to be spoiled.

Is it prostitution by another name?

Seekingarrangement.com's Wade said the men who subscribe to his site are discouraged from offering money on a per-date basis to avoid operating like an escort service.

By crosschecking users' photos with those on craigslist.org and backpage.com, as well as monitoring conversations between members, Wade says he is able to weed out the escorts posting on his site.

Atlanta-based criminal defense attorney Bernard Brody said there's no crime in paying someone solely for his or her companionship.

"The crime is when you pay someone to engage in sexual conduct," he added.

Kimberly Mackey, who attends college in the South, says she had one sugardaddie.com suitor pay her $500 to have lunch with him. She said she doesn't consider herself a prostitute because she doesn't have sex with most of the men she meets through the site.

The 23-year-old started engaging in relationships with older, wealthy men after moving away from home at 18. An older colleague saw she was having trouble supporting herself, so he started inviting her on golf trips with his friends and buying her gifts.

The man told her, "You're only going to be young and hot for so long. Take advantage of it while you can." Mackey got used to the perks. She said sugar daddies have offered her cars, vacations and apartments, but she prefers cash.

The sugar dynamic

Atlanta-based licensed mental health therapist Harrison Davis said sugar relationships are all about power and youth.

On one hand, he said, these relationships remind the men of a more carefree time in their own lives. On the other hand, there's a great sense of control.

"They can take things away and limit the amount of money they're going to spend on the young lady. They can steer [the relationship] into any direction they want to."

Though Mackey says she's not ashamed of her unconventional part-time job, she doesn't make a habit of telling everyone about it.

When her mother asks how she can afford to not work, she says her ex-boyfriend helps her pay her credit card bills, which some people might consider a sugar relationship in its own right.

Cervantes, on the other hand, said her relationship with a family member suffered after she opened up about her experience dating sugar daddies: "He said, 'You're selling your body online.' "

Despite Cervantes' qualms about accepting money in exchange for her companionship, she has no plans to deactivate her account anytime soon.

She said she doesn't have parents who can help her pay for school, so she relies on the kindness of wealthy men out of desperation.

Without the extra income, Cervantes said she'd be back at the homeless shelter she lived in for three months in 2009.

"In my heart of hearts I don't really like the situation," Cervantes said. "Right now it's a survival mechanism."

Protecting the Mag Mile

Downtown alderman pitches plan to put more police on Michigan Ave.

Chicago Tribune

Business associations and other nonprofit groups could pay to put more cops on the street in Chicago's main shopping area and perhaps even in troubled neighborhoods under a proposal offered by the alderman who represents most of downtown.

Ald. Brendan Reilly (42nd) first mentioned the idea in October, but now he has crafted a proposed ordinance in hopes of making it reality. He pitched the idea at a meeting of the Tribune editorial board Tuesday, just three days after a group of teens was arrested for fighting along North Michigan Avenue—a reminder of problems on the city's Magnificent Mile the last two springs.

"The fact that people feel a level of comfort acting up in the Mag Mile on a Saturday evening, that shouldn't be," Reilly said. "I can't say that this would solve that problem, but having additional blues out there, I would argue that in some way that's a deterrent."

Police Superintendent Garry McCarthy addressed the latest Mag Mile incident and another weekend attack on a CTA train at a Greater North Michigan Avenue Association meeting Tuesday that was closed to the media, sources said. He said police were tracking social media, stopping gate jumpers at "L" stations, having cops wear highly visible "checkered hats" and working to quickly defuse any melees, they said.

Reilly's proposal is needed to allow the Police Department to contract with nonprofits.

"People give millions of dollars to build things in Millennium Park," Reilly said. "Some people like to put their names on museums that would be built in Grant Park. Some of those very families could perhaps take on this cause and make a donation of public safety officers."

Reilly said the program could be used along Michigan Avenue, in the Loop, other business areas, Wrigleyville during Cubs games or even in violence-plagued neighborhoods on the South or West sides.

THE DETAILS

Under Ald. Brendan Reilly's (42nd) proposal, business groups, nonprofits, or even churches or philanthropists looking to help thwart crime would pay the costs of putting off-duty cops on the streets to work specific beats—in full uniform and under the command of Chicago police supervisors. Officers would not report to business leaders, as they do when off-duty officers are hired as security guards.

'Horrifying' death under scrutiny

Chicago Tribune

Barbara Laken last talked with her 80-year-old mother Saturday evening, when they chatted over the phone about where they would go for Easter brunch and what they would wear.

When Laken arrived at her mother's 17th-floor Gold Coast home the next morning, the door was ajar and her mother, Florence Banta, was nowhere to be found. There was no sign she had gone out—her purse and wallet still were inside the condo. The family called the police.

On Tuesday, Laken was still disturbed by what followed. Her mother's body was found Monday at the bottom of a trash chute in the building on the 1500 block of North Astor Street. Oddly, it was just more than a year ago that a teenager with Down syndrome and autism fell to his death down a trash chute in the same building.

Laken said the way her mother died was "horrifying."

Police said they still were investigating, but preliminary indications were that Banta's death was an accident. The Cook County Medical Examiner's office said the cause of death awaited further investigation.

Proposal: Train school workers to carry guns

5 WASHINGTON A commission tasked by the nation's most influential gun lobby to assess school safety proposed a set of recommendations Tuesday that includes a plan to train and arm adults as a way to protect kids from shooters.

Former GOP congressman Asa Hutchinson, who headed the National Rifle Association-backed School Safety Shield, said the plan to train school personnel to carry firearms in schools makes sense as a way to prevent shootings like the December massacre in Newtown, Conn.

"Response time is critical," Hutchinson said at a press conference revealing the plan. "If you have the firearms in the presence of someone in the school, it will reduce the response time and save lives."

Hutchinson said the recommendation for school personnel to carry weapons includes the stipulation those adults undergo a 40-60 hour training program and undergo a background check.

The entire report contains eight recommendations, including enhancing training programs for school resource officers and developing an online assessment portal for administrators to gauge their schools' security.

Hutchinson noted at the press conference Tuesday that many schools have visitor policies that aren't enforced and doors that aren't properly secured. Fixing those, he said, would be a step toward preventing further school violence.

He was joined by Mark Mattiolli, whose 6-year-old son, James, was among the 20 students killed at Sandy Hook Elementary in Newtown. Mattiolli, whom Hutchinson described as a "special guest" at the recommendations' unveiling, urged lawmakers to look past their notions of the NRA when reading the group's plan.

"Politics need to be set aside here, and I hope this doesn't lead to name-calling," Mattiolli said. "These are recommendations for solutions. And that's what we need. We need to look at that appendix and we need to do something."

MUST LOVE GUNS

Nelson, a small Georgia city north of Atlanta, is requiring the head of virtually every household to own a firearm, the city's clerk told CNN on Tuesday. The community's five-member council voted unanimously to approve the measure Monday night. Los Angeles. Tampa Bay. Detroit. Arizona. Chicago. St. Louis. Washington, D.C.

It might sound like a Johnny Cash song or the world's worst layover, but for Edwin Jackson, they are the places he's called home since 2005.

Now Jackson, 29, returns to Chicago, this time with the Cubs, who signed him to the first long-term contract of his career (four years, $52 million). He'll be on the mound for the North Siders on Wednesday.

WEDNESDAY'S GAME

It appears his wandering days are over.

For Jackson, moving is nothing new. After all, his Twitter profile lists his locations as "Wherever the wind blows me." A self-described "military brat," Jackson was born in West Germany while his dad was a cook in the Army and didn't pick up baseball until moving to Georgia at age 8.

"I've been on the move all my life, so I'm kind of used to it," Jackson said. "I've been living out of a suitcase for a long time."

Jackson made his major-league debut With the L.A. Dodgers on Sept. 9, 2003, his 20th birthday, beating Randy Johnson and Arizona. But things didn't go smoothly afterward. Though he was traded to Tampa Bay and was part of the rotation that led the team to the World Series in 2008, that was the last time he finished two consecutive seasons with the same team.

"I don't think of [being traded] as a bad thing, it just means teams want me," Jackson said. "Usually it was team going to the playoffs who thinks you can help them win. I understand why a lot of the time I was traded. The organizations want you for how you pitch, you just have to be ready to play."

In Jackson, the Cubs get one of the most electric arms in baseball, consistently throwing 95 mph. He has the resume to prove it: He was an All-Star with Detroit in 2009, threw a no-hitter with Arizona in 2010 and won a World Series with St. Louis in 2011. He also gives the Cubs stability in a rotation that saw 12 pitchers start a game last season. Jackson has started at least 30 games in six straight seasons.

"He has proven his durability and he has proven his talent," Cubs general manager Jed Hoyer said in January. "But he is also still at an age where we think he can get even better and fit right in what we're trying to do age-wise and talent-wise."

Jackson cited the Cubs' bright future as well as his familiarity with Chicago as reasons for joining the team. And the Cubs are doing their part to make Jackson feel at home, already naming him the starter of their home opener.

"I had a chance to pitch in the home opener on the other side of town, but now the South Side is the bad side," Jackson said, laughing. "It's exciting just coming over to the team to start the home opener. Hopefully we get the ball rolling in a positive direction."

After a life on the move, is Jackson ready to finally settle down and buy a home in Chicago?

"I'm probably just renting," he said, laughing. "Chicago winters, man. It's a great city, but I don't want to be here for that."

TRACKING EDWIN JACKSON

Edwin Jackson was born Sept. 9, 1983, in Neu-Ulm, West Germany. He moved to Columbus, Ga., at age 8, but he didn't exactly stay put. Jackson reflected on each of his stops in baseball. S.B.

2001

Drafted by the L.A. Dodgers

SEPT. 9, 2003

Made his major-league debut with the team

"L.A., I love the weather. The Dodgers fan base is amazing. The stadium was full of people in Dodger jerseys always. Night after night it was a great place to play."

JAN. 14, 2006

Traded to Tampa Bay

"We had one of the most fun teams I've played on. We went from not winning a lot of games to the World Series in 2008."

DEC. 10, 2008

Traded to Detroit

"Detroit was fun as well. It was probably my best season. We had a great team. I went to the All-Star Game and so did a lot of my teammates. I had some family who lived in the area, so it was nice to go over to their house too."

DEC. 9, 2010

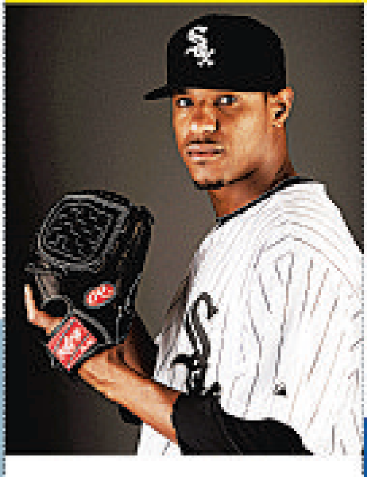
Traded to Arizona

"I threw my no-hitter there. That's a crazy journey, crazy season. It was one of those situations where we weren't always winning games, but you learn how to battle through that."

JULY 30, 2010

Traded to the White Sox

"I had a great second half, had some fun coming in and chasing that [AL Central] championship. The most country music I've ever listened to was in Chicago with Jake Peavy and John Danks there. They had a lot of country singers going on there in the clubhouse."



JULY 27, 2011

Traded to Toronto, then immediately dealt to St. Louis

"In St. Louis I had a chance to get a championship ring. That was a crazy season. Winning the World Series is something I'll never forget."

FEB. 2, 2012

Signed a one-year deal with Washington

"It was exciting to see the city the way it was. Every game was pretty much packed. People were walking around and actually talking about baseball everywhere. I'm not sure what it was like before but I can't imagine [without] it like that. We had a really fun season."

JAN. 2, 2013

Signed a four-year deal with the Cubs

"It's been an easy transition. They have a great clubhouse."

If you could knock some people over, it would really help us out.	Michal, you'll be the center of attention in Chicago if you Handzus a Stanley Cup!	Your bio says you played with the Hawks in 2006, but that makes no sense because the team was founded in 2008.
2 Why are the Blackhawks playing Nashville three times in seven days?	It's a belated April Fools joke?	To scratch a Predator in record time.	Coach Q's deep and abiding love for the music of Rascal Flatts.	Rascal Flatts and Lady Antebellum ... all good country groups come in threes.	Because of the lockout and lockouts ruin everything.
3 Who should be the Cubs' closer?	Whoever it is, he'll earn the unfortunate nickname of Marmol-aid.	Marmos Carmel, Carlos' sweeter and more consistent cousin.	Anyone whose name doesn't rhyme with Schmarlos Schmarmol.	A new scoreboard. The topic alone appears to be moving the Cubs "closer" to Rosemont.	I know it's not multiple choice, but can I go with "D. None of the above"?
4 Now that the Cubs and Sox have lowered ticket prices ...	... that's a few extra bucks toward those expensive stadium beers! Woo!	... a ticket to disappointment is a hell of a lot cheaper than Lollapalooza.	... I'm sorry, I couldn't hear your question over my $77 tickets to Opening Day.	... White Sox fans will have more cash to #MakeAnImpact at the concession stand.	The Cubs lowered ticket prices? Was that before or after I wrote the check for my season tickets?
5 How can you tell the McDonald's All American game is in town?	The Harlem Shake has been temporarily replaced by the Shamrock Shake. I ain't mad.	The cardboard cutouts of D-Rose at McD's are getting more play time than he is.	Teen mobs are wilding over by the UC rather than Water Tower Place.	There's a McFlurry of super-sized kids at the United Center. No small fries, just Big Macs.	A bunch of 18-year-olds are in town arguing over who is most likely to get drafted by the Bobcats next year.

Cubs and White Sox fans are hungry for World Series titles, this we know. We also know they disappoint most of the time. That's when you might need a little food therapy at the ballpark. Here are the new additions at Chicago concession stands.

U.S. CELLULAR FIELD

The Comiskey Burger (available at Burger Barn stands in sections 113 and 529) features a salsa-like topping made from classic Chicago-style hot dog toppings including sport peppers, relish, tomato, onions and celery salt.

There's also a meatball sandwich (121 and 522), and a barbecue pork sandwich called the Bull's BBQ, which was named and created by former White Sox player Greg Luzinski (151 and 531).

The most inventive new addition might be the Walking Taco, a bag of Fritos served with chili, nacho cheese and a fork, available in sections 110, 164 and 544.

A boon for craft beer fans is the addition of Ebel's Weiss from Warrenville, Ill.-based Two Brothers Brewery. It's available in sections 109, 141, 155 and 530. Section 112 also gains a new beer station serving Batch 19, Third Shift, Henry Weinhard's and Blue Moon Agave blonde ale.

WRIGLEY FIELD

Bloody marys made with mix from local company Uncle Dougie's will be sold at drink carts, while the maker's barbecue sauce also will be featured on a pulled pork sandwich served at Blue W (main concourse near home plate), Trippers (upper deck behind home plate) and Throwbacks (right field bleachers).

Fried chicken and waffles are a popular brunch dish, but those craving it at the North Siders' ballpark can order chicken and waffle "stix" with maple dipping sauce.

Other new items include pretzel sandwiches, a veggie dog, a vegetarian chopped salad and The Sheffield Dip, a French dip-style Italian beef sandwich. The signature Stanburger from Stanley's Kitchen & Tap also has been upgraded to a one-third-pound patty.

Watch at redeyechicago.com: “Only a Clown”

In her place

Country-rocker Caitlin Rose will sing when she’s comfortable and listen to bands when she’s ready

By Andy Downing
FOR REDEYE

Growing up, Dallas-born, Nashville-raised singer-songwriter Caitlin Rose initially rebelled against her country roots. Well, maybe “rebellion” is too strong a term.

“As a teenager I’d tell my parents, ‘I’m going to play in a punk club and ya’ll stay away,’ ” said Rose, now 25.

“But it wasn’t rebellion,” she added. “It was more like I was trying to find my own place.”

She does exactly that on her excellent sophomore LP, “The Stand-In,” staking out a vintage sound that pays homage to Nashville’s Music Row roots (the heartbreaking “When I’m Gone”) while remaining a product of the modern era (note her cover of the Felice Brothers’ “Dallas”).

By phone, Rose held court on her disastrous theater debut, the surreal nature of life in Nashville and the reason you’re wasting your time if you tell her to check out a band.

Considering the title of “The Stand-In,” I was wondering if you’ve ever been drawn to the theater.

You know, I had an ill-fated run with it. When I was in high school ... we had this ragtag theater crew we tried to get going. I remember we put on a Thornton Wilder play, which was OK, but when we had our big debut of “You’re a Good Man, Charlie Brown” the whole theater group had a meltdown and we had to scrap the entire thing about halfway into it. So, yeah, I had a moment. And then the moment passed.

Did you learn anything from acting that you were able to apply to music? You are putting yourself in the shoes of these various characters with both.

Being on a stage definitely is performing. One of the main reasons I’ve always loved Linda Ronstadt is because she could sing a song like she was feeling it for the first time.

Is that a skill that comes naturally to you?

I’m not a trained singer, and I’m not someone who grew up singing. But, yeah, I think it’s always come natural to me. Even so, there are a lot of singers who can just burst out into song at any time, and that’s something that makes me feel horribly uncomfortable. Singing is something I can really only do on a stage or when I’m by myself.

So you’re not out doing karaoke on your off nights then?

Oh, karaoke is a different vibe. But you have to be very careful. I did “Stand By Your Man” at a bowling alley one time, and once that song begins everybody looks at the person who’s about to sing it with this intense hatred. But I think I got a standing ovation when I was done.

I’ve interviewed a number of Nashville artists, and everyone seems to have these surreal stories about running into famous musicians.

You can swing a cat and hit anybody. I grew up with parents in the music industry, so we would go to parties in Reba McEntire’s backyard. I’ve been to Arnold’s on 8th Street a few times when John Prine was there, and I’ve never been able to talk to him. A very high-profile female country artist gave my sister the finger while she was canvassing for Obama a few years ago, which was really funny. Have you ever seen [Robert] Altman’s “Nashville”?

Of course.

It’s one of my favorite movies of all time. The more I live here ... the more I think the city really is like that. It’s just a strange place people seem to gravitate towards. Some of the weirdest people I’ve ever known in my life are from here, and it’s not a put-on. It’s a place you can be yourself to the point people are like, “OK, you really went for it.”

> “I’m not a trained singer, and I’m not someone who grew up singing. But, yeah, I think it’s always come natural to me.”
> —Caitlin Rose

On the album’s opening song, you register a common complaint about the radio (“Now the songs I want to hear, they never play”). Have you ever heard your own music on the radio?

I have, back when we still had local radio. That’s what that song is about more than anything. I used to call into our local Vanderbilt station and make requests. It was such an elemental part of growing up for me. I remember the first time I heard Tom Waits I called in and said, “What was that?” And they were like, “ ‘Chocolate Jesus’ by Tom Waits.” That’s something I feel like a lot of people are missing out on now.

How do you discover new music these days then?

I’m not sure. Everybody else uses Pandora or Spotify. I tend to be drawn to older songs, and I think I just wait to hear things at the right time. People will tell me, “Listen to this band!” and usually I just say no. I can’t stand having something forced upon me musicwise.

What was it about those older songs, and specifically older country songs, that really speaks to you?

They’re written well. They’re clever, or they’re the most emotional thing you’ve ever heard. I don’t think they skimp on anything. I think a lot of songwriters today tend to be lazier, where it’s like, “That was a great hook! We’ve got a song!”

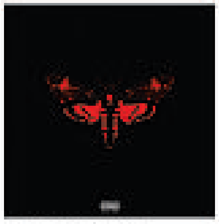
ALBUM REVIEW



I Am Not a Human Being II

Lil Wayne

❗❗❕❕

By Adam Lukach

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

Just before the release of Lil Wayne's most recent album, "I Am Not a Human Being II," TMZ reported that the rapper was being read his last rites in an L.A. hospital—seeming altogether very human.

Thankfully, those reports were mostly exaggerated, but the odd theory that the troubled star's problems stemmed from sobriety was proven to be the farce it always had been. The only thing keeping Wayne from being Weezy F. Baby was Wayne.

Now, on "IANAHB2," we hear a still-sizzurp-soaked Wayne, grasping at the weirdness that once came so easily to him. Except he's mostly delivering lame punch lines during the album's 14 tracks, with even lamer effort. That's especially evident on the two tracks with 2 Chainz, where Wayne's corniness ("[N-word] try to bite my style / but my style a jalapeno") compares fine on paper but is lost in execution, when 2 Chainz's wild yelping helps him come off vastly better.

'80s-influenced rockers like "Back to You" and "Hello" rekindle awful "Rebirth" nightmares, but the worst part of "HB2" is that every guest steps on Wayne, even as he trots out a variety of beats. He sounds like a total Drake knockoff on Mike Will Made It's poppy "[Bleeps] Love Me"; Trina destroys him on the minimal "Wowzerz"; Gunplay does the same on "Beat the [Bleep]," a straight dubstep/hip-hop hybrid. Even Gudda Gudda betters him on the trippy, Juicy-J-produced "Gunwalk."

The irony is those mostly are high points of the LP, as are the ominous openers, "IANAHB" and "Curtains." He sounds unsure and even paranoid: human in a good way, not the arrogant alien spitting sorry puns. It's sad that we've reached that point, but his complacency makes you crave anything done in earnest.

The record's best song, "Romance," on which Wayne revisits the warbly style that he sort of started and Future now has perfected, was pulled from the album's final version. It's corny but accessible, and its absence shows how out of sync he is, despite the cravings of his fans.

We're glad he's still around, because we care about him and his music—we just wish he cared a little more too.

ALBUM REVIEW

Dear Miss Lonelyhearts

Cold War Kids

❗❗❗❕

By Mick Swasko

REDEYE SOUND BOARD

IN CONCERT
9 p.m. Sat. at Metro. Sold out.

If the "concept" behind Cold War Kids' concept album, "Dear Miss Lonelyhearts," is returning to the California band's original sound—indistinguishable on 2011's "Mine is Yours"—the new record is a success.

OK, the disc actually is inspired by Nathanael West's novel "Miss Lonelyhearts," but CWK seems to have bridged the gap between 2008's brilliant "Loyalty to Loyalty" and the hollow, overproduced "Mine is Yours." A few outliers keep "Dear Miss Lonelyhearts" from being a thundering re-realization of the band's earlier sound, led by Nathan Willett's gorgeous and sometimes haunting vocal range and the group's ability to bring scenes to life in their lyrics. The peppy, forgettable "Miracle Mile" gets things off to a rocky start, as if to say, "This is the one they'll play on the radio, I guess."

"Lost that Easy" and "Loner Phase" follow, with synth- and electronic-heavy noise that falls short of backing Willet's always-on crooning.

The rest of the album, though, provides a nostalgic reminder of what makes Cold War Kids work. The record's highlight, "Tuxedoes," offers a hauntingly lonely portrait of a stag wedding guest struggling with his place. A chorus of "When will I find someone to take? / Or did I find, and not realize I was a fake?" punctuates a sad and gorgeous introspective journey of the type of track the band does notoriously well. The remainder of the album doesn't let up, bouncing from the impossibly catchy "Jailbirds" to the subtle, piano-driven "Water and Power."

The album is less a concept and more a statement that the band is still capable of their earlier sound, and it's the striking difference between "Lonelyhearts" and "Mine is Yours" that makes the refreshing return to CWK's roots that much better.

CHAOS theories

The Second City mainstage cast finds inspiration in real-life calamities

By Julia Borcherts

FOR REDEYE

As hard as we try, we can't always control how we—collectively and as individuals—are perceived or what our path through the world will be. Those twists and turns form the through-line of The Second City's 101st mainstage revue, "Let Them Eat Chaos," which journeys across time on cruise ships, in dive bars, at violin lessons and all over Chicago to shed some light—and some humor—on the confusion.

To see how the cast brought order to the chaos inherent in creating a new sketch comedy revue from scratch, we asked each to share a chaotic incident from his or her personal past that proved inspirational when creating the show.

JULIA BORCHERTS IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

Let Them Eat Chaos
Go: 8 p.m. Wednesday (open run; eight shows per week) at The Second City, 1616 N. Wells St.
Tickets: $23-$28. 312-337-3992; secondcity.com

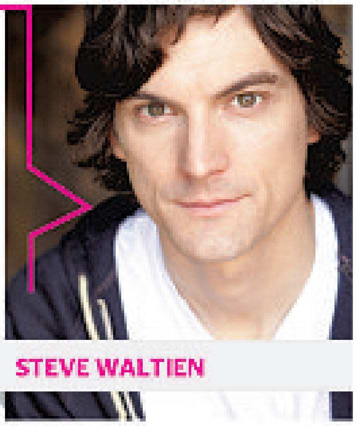
KATIE RICH

"I was a complete accident—my brother and sister are almost 20 years older than me. My parents thought they were closed for business, so to speak. So the fact that I'm here has left me with a sense of wonder as to how it's all just chance."



STEVE WALTIEN

"Our show plays with time and takes place in a few different eras. I was inspired by memories of my grandparents and stories they told of the chaotic time they lived in. Our world seems bigger and more complicated than ever—and yet the World War II generation faced challenges that seem foreign to us. Remembering to find the humor in world events across time helps us manage the chaos."

TAWNY NEWSOME

"I once bought pot from a magician and called the cops on myself."

ROSS BRYANT

"Moving from Texas to North Carolina when I was in high school was sort of chaotic—[and] getting punched up on my bike."

JULIE NICHOLS (MUSICAL DIRECTOR)

"A few years back I went to Sydney with my metal band, with a few other pals who were trying to escape these BS possession charges. Anyway, we lived in an abandoned lumberyard and we used to have bonfires at night. There were lots of stray dogs and fistfights. I wouldn't call it chaotic—but it was definitely inspiring."

EDGAR BLACKMON

"Steve Waltien and I were across the street [from The Second City] at Corcoran's, and we met a woman who said that she loved our show and that she and her date had a great time. An hour later, as we were getting ready to leave, we noticed that this same woman was drunk, and her 'date' had no problem putting another glass of wine in front of her. So when we walked by, we asked her if she wanted to leave with us in a cab and we would get her home. ... Just another day in the life of a Second City mainstage actor."

HOLLY LAURENT

"I was recently at the dog park and watched a bench full of children all glued to cellphones and devices in their hands as puppies jumped at their ankles begging to be played with. Puppies! None of the kids looked up once. It saddened and then scared the [bleep] out of me. That's not really humorous, but it inspired a scene in our show called 'Digital Natives.'"

Small Town Brewing's hard root beer
LENNY GILMORE/ REDEYE

By Kate Bernot
REDEYE

Root beer—A&W, Barq's, Mug, etc.—is really a misnomer. It's soda, made with carbonated water and sweeteners, and, as everyone knows, is totally appropriate to serve at a kid's birthday party.

Not so with two new local brews.

Milwaukee's Sprecher Brewing Company and Wauconda, Ill.'s Small Town Brewery both have developed alcoholic root beers that, at anywhere from 5 to 20 percent alcohol by volume, are hefty even by traditional beer standards.

"It's a fermented malt beverage, whereas root beer doesn't go through fermentation so it doesn't have yeast or alcohol," said Kyle Fornek, assistant beer buyer for Binny's.

Sprecher's Bootlegger's Bourbon Barrel root beer is a hard version of the company's popular root beer soda, and should be available in mid-April in bottles for about $5 per six-pack at Binny's. Fornek says the ABV is around 5 percent, which is comparable to a Budweiser or Goose Island Summertime.

Small Town Brewing's two hard root beers are real heavyweights. At 10 percent and 19.5 percent, the two versions of Not Your Father's Root Beer are best sipped in small doses.

Neither currently are bottled—Small Town Brewing is in talks with a gypsy bottler (a contract bottling line on a truck) to package them. But both versions are available on tap at bars in Chicago, including Little Italy's Three Aces, Ukrainian Village's Lockdown Bar & Grill and Lakeview's Cheesie's Pub & Grub, as well as in kegs from Binny's.

"We've been getting tons of emails about Small Town Brewery," Fornek said. "We're getting as many emails about that as about [New Glarus's] Spotted Cow or Yuengling."

Customers' curiosity is piqued, but do these hard root beers really taste like the soda?

I pulled up a barstool at Lockdown Bar & Grill to find out. Unfazed by the menu's words of caution—"EXTREMELY POTENT: please enjoy in moderation"—I ordered a snifter of Small Town Brewing's 19.5 percent ABV root beer ($8).

Obsidian black and not very carbonated, the brew looked intimidating, but tasted just like soda. It's sweet and spiced, with a slightly syrupy taste and virtually no beer flavor at all. Yes, this could be very dangerous.

While I haven't yet tried Sprecher's version, Fornek reports a similarly soda-like taste.

"It's super drinkable, with a little bit of malt on the finish," he said. "It definitely tastes more like root beer than beer."

'Spies of Warsaw' no masterpiece

Spies of Warsaw
8 p.m. Wednesday and April 10, BBC America

There's a reason "Spies of Warsaw" isn't airing as part of PBS' "Masterpiece Theatre."

I expected the two-parter to be a tense thriller, what with the 10th Doctor Who, David Tennant, playing Col. Jean-Francois Mercier, a French aristocrat who's actually a covert operative spying on both the Nazis and the Russians in pre-World War II Poland.

Spies are hot right now. But in this four-hour miniseries adapted by Dick Clement and Ian la Frenais from the Alan Furst novel, they're mostly boring. Any cloak-and-dagger intrigue is too often interrupted by a stiffly acted romance involving Tennant and Janet Montgomery, late of CBS' short-lived "Made in Jersey," who plays Anna Skarbek, a lawyer for the League of Nations.

So while Jean-Francois is recruiting Warsaw locals and a German scientist into spying for him, he and Anna trade longing looks to a bluesy score and share icky dialogue like, "Our lives aren't as simple as they are in your bed," and, "You know my situation. We hardly know one another." (Anna says the latter line just before hopping into bed with the Frenchman.)

Both Tennant and Mongomery seem uninterested in the whole affair, just as the production apparently wasn't all that worried about how the actors should deliver their often hackneyed lines. Germans speak German with English subtitles. Poles speak English with Polish accents and the Russians speak English with Russian accents—or some vaguely Eastern European accents. Meanwhile, the French speak English with British accents. Sacre bleu!

'Spies of Warsaw'

As a fan of both Tennant and spy thrillers, I gave all these problems a pass on first viewing. But after watching again, I realized "Spies of Warsaw" tells its story in such a leisurely way that it lacks any of the tension you'd expect from a spy story set in 1937-39 Warsaw, which just a year later would be terrorized as the Nazis herded its Jews behind ghetto walls.

The story picks up a bit of energy in its second night, but too often the plot builds to a crisis point and then sputters out. Despite its historic gravitas and scrupulous attention to period detail, "Spies of Warsaw" never really ignites.

TODAY IN THE YEAR ...

1968: Less than 24 hours before he was assassinated in Memphis, civil-rights leader Martin Luther King Jr. delivered his "mountaintop" speech to a rally of striking sanitation workers.

1979: Democrat Jane Byrne was elected mayor of Chicago with 82 percent of the vote, defeating Republican Wallace Johnson.

2006: Charles Barkley, Dominique Wilkins and Joe Dumars were among six people elected to the Basketball Hall of Fame.

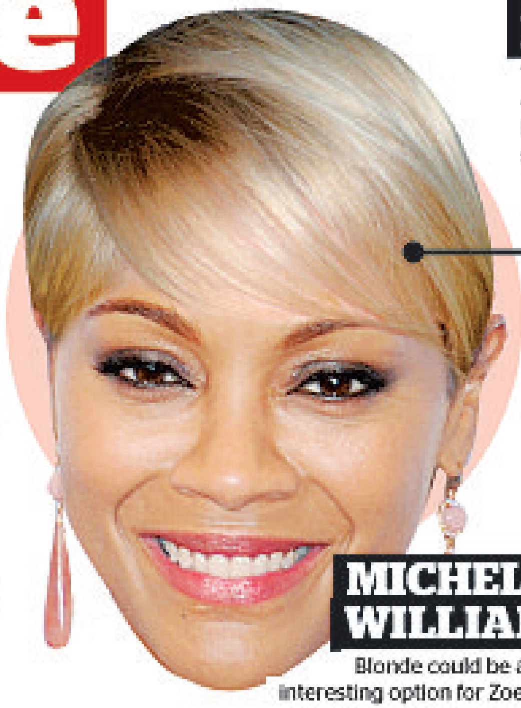
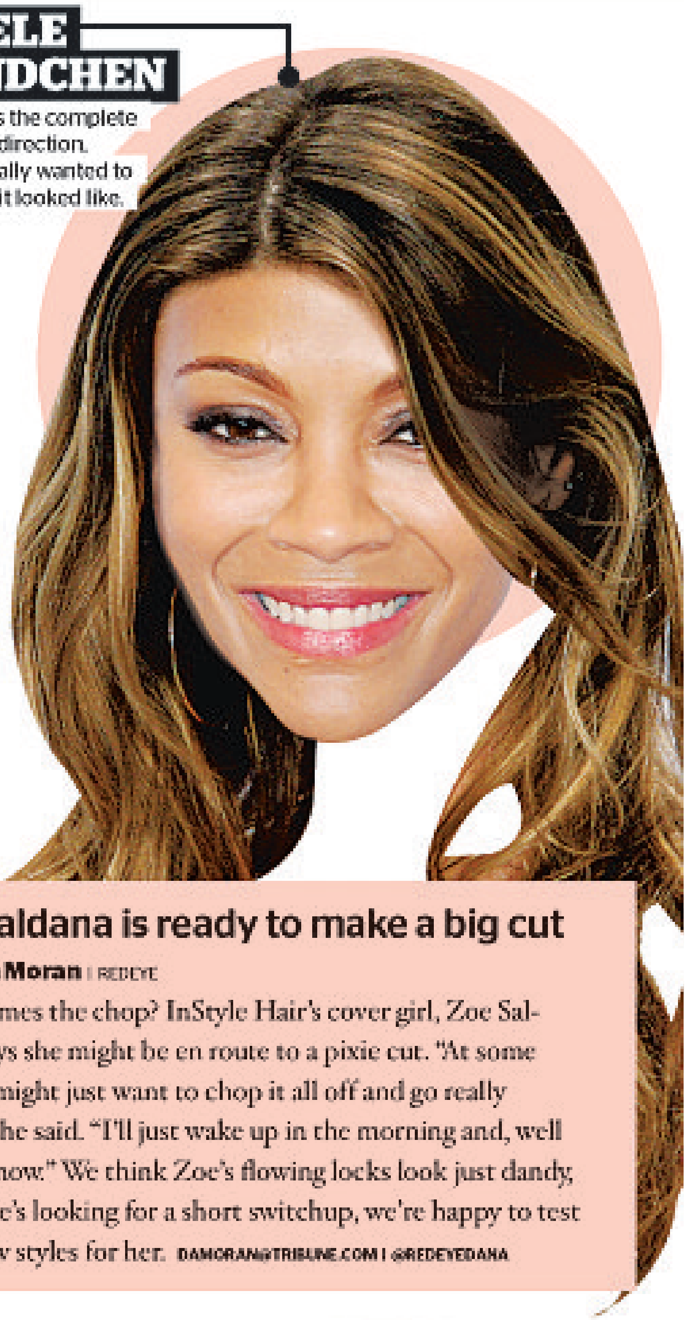
JUSTIN TIMBERLAKE

(circa 2000) It did NOT work for him, but Zoe might be able to pull it ... OK, no, this is wretched.



MICHELLE WILLIAMS

Blonde could be a really interesting option for Zoe ... or it could just turn out really scary.



GISELE BUNDCHEN

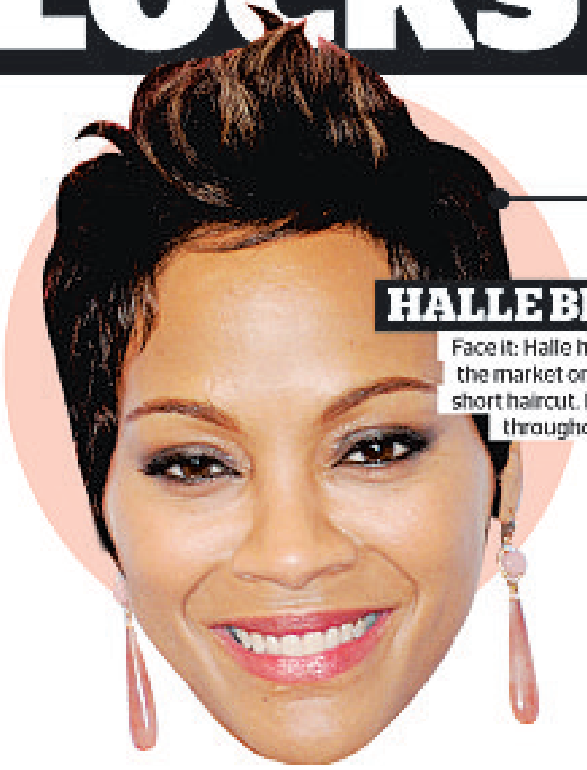
Yes, this is the complete opposite direction, but we really wanted to see what it looked like.

LOVELY LADY LOCKS

Zoe Saldana is ready to make a big cut

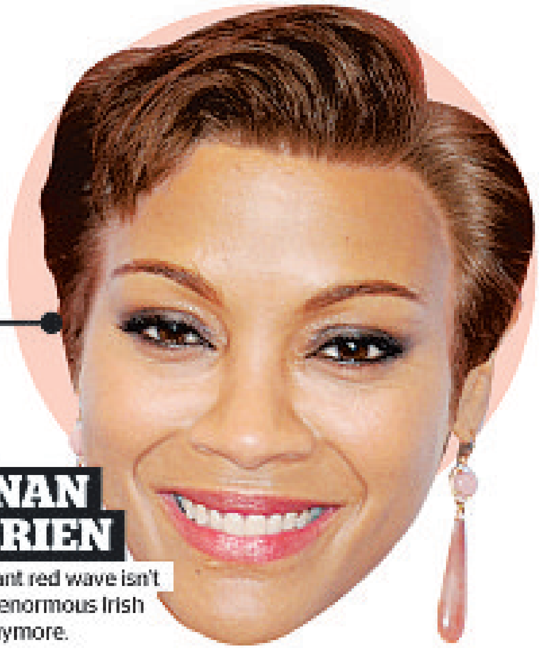
By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Here comes the chop? InStyle Hair's cover girl, Zoe Saldana, says she might be en route to a pixie cut. "At some point I might just want to chop it all off and go really short," she said. "I'll just wake up in the morning and, well ... you know." We think Zoe's flowing locks look just dandy, but if she's looking for a short switchup, we're happy to test out a few styles for her. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA



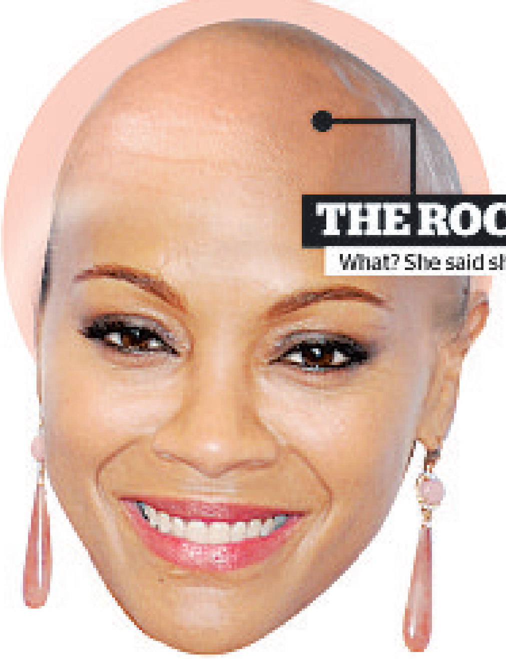
HALLE BERRY

Face it: Halle has cornered the market on the perfect short haircut. Let it spread throughout the land!



CONAN O'BRIEN

That giant red wave isn't just for enormous Irish guys anymore.



THE ROCK

What? She said short!

HOT DATE

Nov. 25, 2015

That's when Pixar will release "Finding Dory," a sequel to "Finding Nemo" that will center on the forgetful fish voiced by Ellen DeGeneres, usatoday.com reports.

Coco crash

You know what sucks? Wedding crashers. You know what doesn't? When the wedding crasher is Conan O'Brien. That's exactly what happened last weekend to a couple in Atlanta, eonline.com reports, after one of the bridesmaids tweeted Coco when she discovered he was staying in the same hotel as the reception. O'Brien hung out for an hour, long enough to drink a cocktail and give a string dance lesson.

> "I can understand asking the question, based on some previous answers I have given. But I have finally learned how to put the wall between one thing and the other."

—John Mayer, responding to Ellen DeGeneres' question Tuesday about his breakup with Katy Perry

Lolla ticket time

Here's your public service reminder: Lollapalooza will put 60,000 single-day tickets (20,000 tickets at $95 for each day) on sale at 10 a.m. Wednesday for the Aug. 2-4 festival in Grant Park. Tickets will be available at lollapalooza.com.

And don't forget ...

Justice, Diplo and Nicolas Jaar were among the first round of performers announced Tuesday for the Wavefront Music Festival on July 5-7 at Montrose Beach. Tickets go on sale at 9 a.m. Thursday at wavefrontmusicfestival.com.

THE DIGIT

320,000

That's how many users shared part or all of Sunday's Season 3 premiere of "Game of Thrones" through an online bittorrent service, according to torrentfreak.com, which documents this online form of piracy. The previous record: 144,663 users for the Season 3 premiere of NBC's "Heroes." The "GOT" premiere was watched, legally, by a series-high 4.4 million viewers on HBO, which on Tuesday renewed the series for a fourth season.

Can't you see?

Ever wanted to live like Notorious B.I.G.? Now you can! The late Biggie's Brooklyn apartment has been put on the market, nymag.com reports. Listing price: $725,000. According to the listing, the apartment "was renovated a few years ago preserving traditional styling while answering the needs of modern usage."
